Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Naturalist's Diary: A Day-Book of Meteorology, Phenology and Rural Biology Correlations exist between the leafing of trees, the germination of seeds, and the temperature on the grass; between the blossoming of flowers and the appearance of insects; between the ripening of fruit, the appearance of insects, and the temperature in the sun; between the appearance of insects and their larvae, the ripening of fruit and seeds, and the nesting and migration of birds - all of which are of great scientific interest, and of practical value to persons engaged in rural occupations, as is also a knowledge of the first appearance of insect pests, with a view to their early destruction. To the botanist, entomologist, and ornithologist, and especially to the young naturalist, the Diary will serve as a guide to the localities and the seasons where and when the objects he wishes to study may be found; and it will supply lists of objects to be looked for on each day of the year. It will also enable him to record the...
