Not illustrated. 1904 Excerpt: .themselves would under the same conditions, and the conditions we are to bring about; herein lies the secret of artistic arrangement. Do not suppose that this is a mere matter of taste, all easy enough if facility in copying could be secured. It is well to be anxious about your ability to copy or reproduce the object before you, and you cannot be too faithful in doing this, provided you do it in the right way. But you are not required to search out and scrutinise that which you are to paint; you must take in the general character, what is seen at a reasonable distance. That should impress you so that you will reproduce it as surely as the camera would; and you have the advantage over the camera, in that you are able to use colour as well as light and shade. It is in light and shade that the novice is most apt to fail. The unpractised eye is slow to recognise its supreme influence; local colour seems the more real, and there is a disposition on the part of the novice to allow it to hold its own even in the highest lights and the deepest shadows. In giving instructions for setting a palette to paint a scarlet drapery, a teacher will be likely to cause consternation if he names the colours for shades, half-tints and lights before he names Vermilion. Bone Brown, Burnt Umber, Cobalt, Yellow Ochre, and White sound very...
